To Whom It May Concern:

For the past twenty years I have employed Zhenya Terekhin as a translator in quite a number of projects. One of the largest projects was the translation of a series of articles running to approximately 50,000 words. The projects all involved translations from English to Russian. Mr. Terekhin has done some oral translation for us, but most of the work has consisted of written translations, including several books around 350 pages in length. All of the translations concerned religious or philosophical themes.

Mr. Terekhin's grasp of English and its nuances is superior by far to most translators I have worked with. He is especially competent in grasping and understanding the philosophical and religious concepts presented and expressing them in good Russian. I have submitted his Russian translations to Russian professionals for editing and have been told that no editing was required.

If I can provide any more details about our experience with Mr. Terekhin's work, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,
